Experiments were carried out in order to test the usefulness of the "oxygen method" for the indicator of the end point during a technical fermentation process of tobacco, which provide information on the factors influencing the "oxygen method". In this respect, consideration was given to the state of ripeness of the leaves on the plant, the effect of (Biological Sciences--Biochemistry, TT, v. 10, no. 2)

temperature on tobacco leaf material having varying moisture contents, storage of unfermented leaf tobacco, as well as the pretreatment of the tobacco in preparation for its fermentation. Different processes of technical fermentation were also revised by applying the "oxygen method" on homegrown tobaccos for cut material as well as on selected, not completely fermented imported tobaccos, which were subjected to an after-fermentation. The results obtained during this experiment are described in detail. (Author)
